Questions for Dr Ravikumar Bangalore Krishnaiah, treating psychiatrist

Mr Shepherd's object is a safe and sustainable return to his substantive role. The Health Service has asked what workplace controls are medically necessary. Your opinion is sought on that question, and on the functional matters below, so that the workplace can be adjusted around them. A holistic formulation is welcomed, including Mr Shepherd's own understanding of his condition and its management.

1(d) Whether exposure to the identified workplace stressors presents a foreseeable risk to Mr Shepherd's health or safety if he were to return to work, and if so, what specific workplace controls or adjustments you consider medically necessary to manage that risk.

Mr Shepherd notes that identifying and implementing controls is a function of the employer under Part 3.1 of the Work Health and Safety Regulation 2011. Your opinion is sought on what is medically necessary.

7 Your report of 13 February 2025 states that Mr Shepherd's "working memory is affected under stress". Please clarify what this means in functional terms in the workplace, including (a) how this may affect capacity to perform substantive duties under normal workplace demands, and (b) the types of circumstances likely to cause this difficulty.

8 Are there specific tasks, situations or environments (for example high-pressure settings, shift work, patient acuity) that may exacerbate Mr Shepherd's condition or symptoms?

The role is a continuous shift working role covering multiple shifts over a 24/7 period.

9 Mr Shepherd reports that distress can peak shortly before a rostered shift, and that the knowledge that a late absence leaves the switchboard short compounds it. He has raised for consideration (i) a routine pre-shift call from an operator to confirm attendance, so that cover can be arranged with notice rather than at the last minute, (ii) rostered on-call cover for his shifts, and (iii) an escalation pathway he may initiate during a shift if acutely exacerbated. In your opinion, would arrangements of that kind be clinically appropriate, and are there others you would recommend in preference?

These are offered for consideration only. The first two are rostering measures and require no colleague to know anything about his health. He has expressly declined any arrangement under which colleagues observe or assess his condition. Your opinion on what is medically necessary is what the Health Service has asked for.

This report is sought in respect of current capacity, functional restrictions and workplace controls. It is not sought on the aetiology of the injury, which is a separate matter and is the subject of separate instructions. The purpose of this report is collaborative. Mr Shepherd wishes to return to his substantive role and is seeking the identification of workplace controls that would allow him to do so safely and sustainably. A holistic formulation is welcomed, including the patient's own understanding of his condition, its triggers and its management, which Mr Shepherd regards as central to working safely. Nothing in this request should be read as inviting an adverse or medico-legal opinion about any person.
